Loess Hills Artist-in-Residence Program

Mutual Flourishing of Art and Land

How Does LoHi AiR Work?

Two weeks.
Seven counties.
One remarkable landscape.

LoHi AiR brings artists into the Loess Hills of Western Iowa for an immersive two-week residency dedicated to creating work inspired by one of the region's most distinctive and threatened landscapes.

Live here.

Artists will be hosted in a range of state park and county-owned cabins, working farms, vacation rentals, and vetted volunteer hosts. Preference will be given to local and indigenous applicants.

Make here.

Residents receive studio space, a financial stipend, rural logistical support, and access to a team of environmental experts who can inform their art.

Give something back.

This residency creates a reciprocal relationship between artists, communities, and landscape while using art to inspire curiosity and stewardship.

We believe that land can inspire art,
that art can inspire a love of land,
and that through that love, protection and stewardship will follow.

We need voices to tell and shape the stories of the Loess Hills.

Help us plant the first seeds!

We're seeking founding donors to help LoHi AiR take root. Your tax-deductible gift supports artist lodging, stipends, studio space, thoughtful community offerings, local hosts, and the people making the residency possible.

Which seed will you sow?
